

Ways to Refresh Mature Landscaping

1. Refresh Overgrown or Outdated Plantings

Many mature properties feature plants that have outgrown their original design. Large trees or overgrown hedges can make your space feel claustrophobic and unwelcome. While you don't need to remove everything, thoughtful pruning and selective replacements can dramatically open up your space.

2. Improve Flow and Functionality

The original patio may be too small for gatherings, or there's no clear path between your home and detached garage. Mature properties often lack the layout flexibility of new builds, but thoughtful landscaping can create new flow and usability. Design elements, such as paver walkways and expanded patios, help define zones and guide movement throughout the yard.

3. Upgrade Irrigation and Drainage Systems

Outdated irrigation systems are common in older landscapes, resulting in water waste and inadequate coverage. Adding a modern system tailored to your current planting layout improves efficiency while conserving resources. Alongside irrigation, address drainage concerns. If you've noticed puddling or soggy areas, targeted drainage solutions, such as French drains or dry creek beds, can help restore balance.

4. Restore or Rebuild Hardscape Features

Like older houses, older gardens can have features that need attention. Cracked patio pavers, sinking steps, or tumbling down retaining walls are common signs that your yard's hardscape needs attention. Fortunately, an experienced hardscaping service can provide an upgrade tailored to your own home, from more minor refreshes like paver cleaning all the way up to a complete rebuild if that is what is needed.

5. Bring in Landscape Lighting for Evening Impact

Outdoor lighting enhances beauty and safety, especially for mature properties that may have more twists and turns than a modern yard. Use warm, low-voltage lighting to highlight hardscape details and guide you along your paths. These will help showcase your yard's special details and redefine how your landscape looks and feels after dark.

6. Blend New Features with Existing Character

One of the biggest advantages of mature properties is their established grandeur. Instead of removing everything and starting over, you can layer in thoughtful updates that honor the existing character. Work to retain focal points that give the space its charm. Even small new additions, like a new seating nook beneath an old oak, can feel intentional and timeless when integrated with care.

7. Incorporate Seasonal Maintenance and Planning

Once you have refreshed your mature property, you want to keep it looking its best with seasonal care. By working with a landscaping team familiar with mature properties, you gain peace of mind knowing that your space will continue to thrive season after season.

Presented by:

RiversideCustomOutdoors.com

Riverside
CUSTOM
OUTDOORS

Image Source:
pexels.com